I had a good time with this one... the subject was rather simple but the lighting was challenging as far as looking at a portrait from the back. As this is a DIY, I can identify with it...I would have enjoyed a sitter more than a shot at a wall. Anyhow, there were no mistakes, at least not that I know of. Very nice. I like the subtle pop of white through the bee. Interesting choice of lighting--nice to see what that entails. Love the way it seems to be a diffused blur to the subject's face. The pic has a very unusual look, very satisfying.Q: Rails 3.2 - how to resolve uninitialized constant Error Here is the error message: uninitialized constant UsersController (NameError) Here is my controllers: class UsersController [Operative intervention in the perilymphatic compartments]. Q: Oracle SQL Developer Query Editor shows ERROR too much data for sorting In one of the queries, Oracle SQL Developer query editor shows ERROR too much data for sorting. But the query runs fine in the SQL Plus. How do I resolve the issue? A: Queries are: Sorted to display in a particular order Supports the application of LIMIT to limit the number of rows returned to display Supports the application of ORDER BY to affect the sorting of results Supports the application of ORDER BY (descending or ascending) to either sort from highest to lowest (ascending) or lowest to highest (descending). The query editor (right-click query) and the execute query (CTRL+SHIFT+F10) use the SQL Plus library. The error you are experiencing might stem from the limit in your SQL Plus query. The role of hyperglycaemia and hyperinsulinaemia in non-insulin dependent diabetes mellitus. The glycaemic response to a pre-prandial oral glucose challenge in Type II diabetics is markedly prolonged compared to normal subjects. A proportion of the patients with this response have fasting hyperinsulinaemia. These are mainly subjects with progressive IDDM. The type of glucose challenge test employed has a major influence on the degree of glycaemic response. The magnitude of the response increases from a fasting value of 8-10 mM in a meal tolerance test (MTT) to a 6-8 mM value in a post-prandial insulin tolerance test. In MTT, the hyperglycaemia is relatively responsive to the magnitude of insulin, and insulin may play a key role in the pathogenesis. In contrast, in PTTT, the hyperglycaemia is relatively resistant to the action of insulin and it is the hyperinsulinaemia which appears to be the major factor. Therefore, the insulin tolerance test is of little use in the diagnosis of Type II diabetes in the absence of other features. Hyperinsulinaemia has been found in both newly diagnosed and long-term diabetic patients. In the former, it has been found to have a role in the pathogenesis. In long-term diabetics who are obese, it tends to predominate over a state of insulin resistance which is commonly associated with hyperglycaemia.(Reuters) - High-profile Republican U.S. Senator John McCain returned to Capitol Hill on Wednesday
